Sabrient Ratings

Sabrient's Buy/Hold/Sell ratings are based on a combination of dynamic filters that determine which attributes of a stock are most predictive in the prevailing market and which stocks best reflect those attributes but are not yet rewarded.

Sabrient starts with an "extraction" process that uses the best performing filters to identify stocks having certain compelling attributes currently sought by the market. Then, a composite scoring process uses a weighted average of several key scores to quantify the relative likelihood of upside or downside price action. As a result, the Buy/Hold/Sell rating may, in certain cases, seem inconsistent with a simple average of the scores cited in this analysis.

A BUY rating means the stock is expected to outperform its relevant benchmark substantially over the next 6 months. A SELL rating means the stock is expected to underperform its relevant benchmark substantially over the next 6 months. A HOLD rating means the stock is expected to perform in line with its relevant benchmark over the next 6 months.

If a stock is rated HOLD, the investor should review the stock's history of Sabrient ratings to see if it has recently changed to HOLD from BUY or SELL. If so, this indicates one of the following: (1) there has been a significant change in the stock's fundamentals, (2) the stock is already appropriately rewarded or punished by the market, or (3) there simply has been some recent price consolidation that warrants attention. A reading of Sabrient's analysis should identify which it is.

- Best Performing Filters: To determine the likelihood of near-term performance, Sabrient builds and backtests "Smart Filters" to establish which caps, styles and attributes are drawing a premium in today's market. Currently, the three most predictive filters for the relevant segment are:

Cash Flow vs. EPS Filter: The Cash Flow vs. EPS Filter measures short-term cash flow and free cash flow growth against short-term revenue growth and earnings consistency. The filter outperformed its large-cap benchmark by a substantial margin over the past three months. AFL scores 44.6 for this filter.

Composite Growth Filter: The Composite Growth Filter includes long-term and short-term factors related to earnings, cash flow and revenue growth. The filter has significantly outperformed its large-cap benchmark over the past three months. AFL scores 33.3 for this filter.

Consistency Filter: The Consistency Filter measures various earnings trends, along with short-term revenue growth. High scores are given to stocks that exhibit a smooth expansion in earnings and notable short-term revenue growth. The filter is currently among Sabrient's best performers in the large-cap segment. AFL scores 59.6 for this filter.

In summary, AFL's Strong Buy rating is based on a profile of forward-looking metrics which show this stock could significantly outperform the broader markets.

What the Market Wants: April 2009

SPRING BRINGS HOPE TO MARKET

By David Brown, Chief Market Strategist

(April 2, 2009 5:25 pm PST) The first week of March spawned a terrible market, chiefly caused by Moody's downgrading the creditworthiness of J.P. Morgan and threatening to do the same to others. On March 6, the S&P 500 hit a low of 683, its lowest level in nearly 13 years. As so often happens when clouds are the darkest, the market recovers, and indeed, it did so this time, starting the second week of March.

Based on comments from Citibank, J.P. Morgan and other banks that they had indeed made profits for the first two months of the year, the market roared back with one of its best weeks since last November. That was followed with two more weeks of positive performance, caused by a plethora of leading indicators, such as durable goods orders, new housing sales, personal income, consumer confidence, reporting poor but better than expected numbers. In some cases, such as retail sales, there were small gains.

To be sure, the unemployment reports and jobless claims continued to report downright frightening numbers, but it seemed that those who were employed were finally starting to come back into the economy and spend some money.

So March ended as the first positive month since December, with the Nasdaq leading the way, up nearly 11%. All of the indices we follow were up 8% or more, except for the Dow Jones Industrial Average, which gained 7.7%. It is very hard to say whether large-caps, small-caps or mid-caps did better, since they were all quite similar, but growth clearly outperformed value in each style/cap.

Granted. the first quarter ended up negative with the Russell MidCap Growth Index, the best style/cap, losing a little over 3%, and the Russell 2000 Value Index, the worst style/cap losing over 20%. The Nasdaq itself lost only 3% for the quarter, while the S&P 500 lost nearly 12%, so we should hold off on our celebrations until this rally extends further.

Some fairly violent down days have proved that we're not out of the woods yet. This past Monday (3/30), the Administration came down pretty hard on the auto industry, and the market pulled back sharply. It pulled back sharply another day when a Treasury auction did not go well.

So the market is still a dangerous place, and the bear is not yet dead, but the breadth and continuity of this rally gives us some hope that the worst is over. Indeed, respectable economists are forecasting the economy to turn positive either late this year or early next. The market normally discounts 6 to 9 months ahead, so we are cautiously optimistic that we'll see a number of positive market weeks in the months ahead.

This is the time for prudent building of your portfolio. The market is still awash with deep bargains, many not seen in the past 20 or 30 years, with a lot of excellent companies selling for 5 times earnings or less. Growth metrics are the clear favorite of this market and have been since the first of the year. Growth at a reasonable price and with strong cash flow is the favored characteristic of winners.

Historically, it is a sign of the end of a bear market when investors begin showing a clear preference for growth as opposed to value. That appears to be the case, at least for now.

Next update: First week of May.

About Sabrient

Sabrient Systems is an independent research firm providing statistical analysis of a company's fundamental data to investment professionals. We use a computer-driven, quantitative methodology to identify stocks that appear poised to outperform or underperform the market.

The Sabrient methodology was developed by an experienced research team led by David Brown, a former NASA scientist and retired CEO of Telescan and designer of its premier stock search program, ProSearch. The research team employs a scientific approach to the creation and testing of multi-factor filters. Each filter targets a key area of traditional stock analysis, including value, growth, momentum, fundamentals, earnings, balance sheet, and group strength. Using an adaptive process, filters are continually tested and monitored to ensure that only the best performing filters are at work.

Sabrient's ratings begin with an extraction process in which each of the few best-performing filters scans the universe of equities to identify stocks having certain compelling attributes sought, but not sufficiently rewarded, by the current market. Then, a composite scoring system employs a broader set of "weighting" filters to rank the extracted stocks. To support individual investors, Sabrient uses the same sophisticated methodology to provide individual stock reports on a universe of approximately 5,600 stocks.

Sabrient regularly tests the performance of its stock selections, using its primary list of published rankings and statistical techniques it believes appropriate. These recommendations have consistently outperformed relevant benchmarks across a broad range of investing styles, market caps, time frames and market conditions, demonstrating the robustness of Sabrient's proprietary methodology. While past performance is no guarantee of future results, Sabrient believes it can maintain its strong performance through its rigorous, scientific approach to filter construction and ongoing backtesting within a dynamic and adaptive composite scoring system.
